Bert Hoppe, In Stalins Gefolgschaft: Moskau und die KPD 1928-1933 [In Stalin's Retinue: Moscow and the German Communist Party, 1928-33]. 395 pp. Munich: Oldenbourg, 2007. ISBN-13: 978-3486582550. 54.80 [euro]. Brigitte Studer The predominant role of the German Communist Party (KPD) in the Comintern in the 1920s and 1930s is indisputable and well known. (1) Is there anything more that can be said about it in the crucial years before Hitler came to power? Yes indeed, as the present study amply shows. Bert Hoppe's revised history dissertation, defended at Humboldt Universitat in Berlin, profited doubly from the (partial) opening of the Russian archives: first, from access to new sources, and second, from the important development of the state of the art that followed in Soviet and communist studies. (2) This twofold potential has led to an advance in knowledge that proves particularly helpful concerning Moscow's influence on communist parties and the way Stalin exercised power on the Comintern. Although this book does not engage in comparative or explicitly transnational analysis, it draws on new findings to contrast or illuminate certain aspects of the relationship among the KPD, the Executive Committee of the Communist International (ECCI) and the Politburo of the Soviet Communist Party under Stalin's leadership. (3) The author, moreover, made up for the inaccessibility of certain Moscow archival collections, such as the Piatnitskii Secretariat, through the fortunate acquisition by the former German Democratic Republic (GDR) of voluminous microfilmed copies of documents concerning the KPD, which are now open to scholars in Berlin.
